Keynote Speaker 1. Ms. Date Kanako (Public Speaker, Youth Empowerment Producer)

Ms. Date Kanako emphasized the importance of developing one's "stage voice," encouraging participants to communicate with confidence, clarity, and purpose. She underscored that young leaders should be prepared to share their own perspectives and contribute actively to public dialogue. Immersing oneself in an international environment broadens horizons and shapes impactful leadership behavior. Crucially, Ms. Date emphasized that her own past initiatives are rooted in the foundational communities, as a JASC alumna and Miss World Japan. Her encouragement to leverage these opportunities directly resonates with the spirit of TogetherWeTri.

Keynote Speaker 2. Ambassador Fujisaki Ichiro (President, America-Japan Society)

Ambassador Fujisaki Ichiro underscored that people-to-people ties remain a central pillar of U.S., ROK, and Japan relations, particularly as government priorities may shift over time. He emphasized the importance of sustained networks among students, professionals, and emerging leaders for long-term cooperation, and described the current momentum in Korea as a notable and encouraging development. Ambassador Fujisaki also highlighted the three countries' shared commitment to freedom of speech and democratic values, reminding participants that these principles must not be taken for granted and should continue to guide trilateral partnership.

Keynote Speaker 3. Ambassador Park Cheol-Hee (Special Advisor at the International House of Japan)

Ambassador Park Cheol-Hee highlighted the growing importance of Japan-ROK cooperation as a foundation for stronger U.S., Japan, and ROK cooperation, noting that Korea's competitive standing in the region has increased the visibility and strategic value of this relationship. He emphasized that next generations, through expanding people-to-people ties, are well positioned to lead a more forward-looking partnership. He also pointed to emerging private-sectors and the need to strengthen exchanges among young generation leaders among the three countries. Ambassador Park framed the next phase of trilateral cooperation as moving beyond "Let's go together" toward "Let's do together."

Group Discussion

Participants were divided into small working groups of four to examine specific pillars of trilateral cooperation. Delving into their personal connections to the three countries helped participants identify their individual stakes in these initiatives, while giving organizers a clearer understanding of attendee motivations. Notably, participant feedback requested longer dialogue blocks. The presence of diverging opinions fueled a strong eagerness for deeper debate, which became highly visible during the energetic networking session.

#Now It is yourTurn — From Workshop to Classroom: Counter Speech Co-Creation Seminar Initiative

Highlights

Date: June 12th (Fri) 2:00 PM - 5:00 PM
Venue: Nikkei Inc.

TTT alumna conducted a site visit to Nikkei Inc. to examine how generative AI and social media are reshaping modern public discourse. The briefing focused on how journalists navigate these emerging technologies while maintaining journalistic integrity.

During the visit, the delegation exchanged insights with Mr. Waichi Sekiguchi, Chairman of the MM Research Institute and former Nikkei editorial writer, alongside Ms. Sachiko Murui, General Manager, Human Resources and Education Business Unit at Nikkei Inc. Following this discussion, we visited NIKKEI MUSEUM, which chronicles the history of Nikkei Inc. The exhibition underscored Nikkei's long-standing commitment to political neutrality through fact-based economic journalism, highlighting its vital role in the media landscape. Furthermore, the museum seamlessly integrated interactive technology, demonstrating Nikkei's innovative approach to engaging and educating the public.

Keynote Session - Media & Journalism Perspective

Ms. Haruka Satake, a YTL alumna and journalist, discussed how young people can critically read news in an era of AI-generated fake images and online misinformation. Drawing on her journalism background, she introduced ways to compare sources, headlines, and framing across major media outlets in different countries. The session helped participants understand how the same event can be reported differently and why objective news reading is essential for responsible communication.

Keynote Session - The Future of Free Speech (virtual)

Dr. Natalie Alkiviadou introduced counterspeech as a non-restrictive response to harmful speech, emphasizing that it is not censorship or silencing others. She outlined practical strategies such as empathy, education, humor, and amplification to address hate speech, misinformation, and dangerous speech. Participants also explored case studies and practiced drafting responses that challenge harmful generalizations while maintaining respect and common ground.

Curriculum Development Co-Creation Workshop

Led by Educational Facilitator Dr. L.G. Michael Brown(Tokyo International University), the workshop guided pre-service English teachers through a “Lesson Planning Studio” to translate media literacy, misinformation, and counterspeech concepts into practical English classroom activities. Participants worked in three groups to develop lesson plans with clear learning objectives, student-centered activities, discussion prompts, and reflection questions that could be adapted for high school English classes.

Group Presentation & Final Synthesis

Each group presented its draft lesson plan and received feedback on classroom applicability and student engagement. Group 1, “The Fake News Detector,” focused on identifying real versus AI-generated images and headlines. Group 2, “The Angry Rumor Brake,” addressed why unverified rumors spread on X and why they can be harmful. Group 3, “Counterspeech Heroes,” explored constructive responses to hateful or bullying comments online. The final synthesis connected the lessons around critical thinking, responsible communication, and constructive counterspeech.
